The Daily Press

HONGKONG, JULY 19th, 1878.

THE notes on the plague in Yunnan by Mr. ROBERTS, of the Imperial Maritime Customs Service, are interesting as showing that this great epidemic has not, as was generally supposed, quite disappeared from the catalogue of ill that befall mankind. It raged in Yunnan last in the years 1821, 1872, and 1873, and a very small proportion of the persons attacked recovered from the disease. The superstitious practice adopted by the Chinese of placing the dead bodies on a bier and exposing them to the sun instead of burying them has no doubt, as Mr. ROBERTS justly remarks, tended to aggravate the disease. It seems that the Chinese have got hold of an idea that all persons who die of the plague are possessed by a devil, and may not be interred, lest the repose of their ancestors be disturbed and the sanctity of Feng-shui interfered with. The consequences are, of course, disastrous. The decaying corpses pollute the air, and scatter far and wide the germs of the dreaded plague. Yunnan has been an unfortunate province. War and disease have wrought such havoc among the people that vast tracts are now absolutely depopulated, while on every hand the ruins of former thriving towns and villages attest the rapid decadence in the prosperity of the country. The Chinese Government, having measured the bulk of the population when suppressing the Mohammedan rebellion, should now do its best to restore the province to its ancient condition, and to that end should promote emigration from the more densely populated portions of the Empire. It should also give instructions to the Governor to administer the affairs of the province with energy, and to take measures to prevent the perpetuation of the plague. Otherwise it may spread to the neighboring provinces and ultimately extend over the whole of China. The publication of Mr. ROBERTS's notes should be accepted as a timely warning.

THE announcement that the Japanese Central Government have agreed to grant a loan of $1,500,000 for the purpose of working some of the coalfields of Yezo is important on account of the enormous area over which the mineral spreads in that island. Mr. LYMAN, who has recently surveyed the coalfields of Yezo, gives it as his opinion that there are about a hundred and fifty thousand millions of tons of workable coal in the island, or sufficient to allow of a yearly yield equal to that of Great Britain for nearly a thousand years. In short, Yezo can be made the second largest coal producer in the world, provided the mines are only properly worked. The revenue derivable by the Crown from these mines will be something enormous every day. Of course it will take both time and capital to develop the coal mines, but even if the work should proceed at a moderate pace, the prosperity of Japan will receive a great impetus. The Government is quite alive to the importance of developing the natural resources of the country, and also of encouraging new industries. Mistakes have naturally been made in some directions, but on the whole a great stimulus has been given to the productive power of Japan, and the people are fully prepared to take up any enterprise within the scope of their means and ability. They have a Min, they have numerous factories in which Western machinery is employed, and they have constructed several railways, built a number of ships on the Western model, and work some of their mines very successfully with European machinery. The Japanese are making great material progress despite all that pessimists say to the contrary, and they will, if they persevere in their efforts to make the mineral and agricultural resources of their country available, soon attain a most prosperous condition. China is also being roused by the example of Japan into measures for the development of her underground treasures, and the coal mines of Chihli will shortly be worked in a scientific manner. But we question whether the Chinese Authorities will enter into the enterprise with the zeal and faith shown by the Japanese. The time is evidently not very distant, however, when coal will be a cheap article in the Far East, and the Cardiff mineral will be entirely shut out of the market.

Dave Carson gave his farewell benefit performance on Wednesday evening at the Theatre Royal, City Hall, under an appreciative if not a large audience. The programme was a long and varied one, and was carried out in its integrity. The first part consisted of miscellaneous, in which the company were frequently applauded, and the second part the benefit of the popular impressionist of the "Bengal Baboo in England," a clever sketch in which the actor is good and the imitation lifelike. Dave's forte is mimicry, and his display of mimicry in this line drew from the audience well-deserved applause. Part three, "Bombas Farias," brought the performance to a close, and the company then "Sheduled." The head of the played several selections, during the evening, under the direction of Mr. Buchanan, which added much to the evening's entertainment.

High rights are to be restored and the principle of international law is to be applied to the world without any regard to the origin of the rights. The present question is as to the regulation of international law, looked at from a positive and practical point of view. Such rights are not originally confined to Christian Europe when they originated. A community of material interest and also a commonality in public interest, ideas of justice, and of moral law, must be presupposed between all the nations according to the principle of international law.

The history has already shown an instructive instance of the premature extension of international law to an Oriental nation. In 1855 the signatory Powers to the Treaty of Paris formally declared the Sultan to be a sovereign State, and admitted to the advantages of international law. The Sultan, however, was not a sovereign State, but a vassal of the European Powers. The Sultan, however, was not a sovereign State, but a vassal of the European Powers. The Sultan, however, was not a sovereign State, but a vassal of the European Powers.

Following this method, we propose in this present essay to examine the problem of the application of international law to the East. The question of international law is a question of international law, and it is a question of international law. The question of international law is a question of international law, and it is a question of international law.
